

BRILLIANTS FROM BROWNING.

Measure your mind's height by the shade it casts.
—[Paracelsus]
God be thanked, the meanest of his creatures
Boasts two sun-sides, one to face the world with,
One to show a woman when he loves her.
—[Ouo Tuo Mora]

All great works in this world spring from the ruins
Of greater projects; ever, on our earth,
Men block out Babel to build Babelons.
—[Return of the Druses]

The common problem, yours, mine, every one's,
Is—not to fancy what were fair in life
Provided it could be—but finding first
What may be, then find how to make it fair
Up to our means.
—[Bishop Blougram's Apology]

This is the spray the bird clung to,
Making it blossom with pleasure,
Ere the high tree-top she sprung to
Pit for her nest and her treasure.
Oh, what a hope beyond measure
Was the poor spray's, which the flying feet hung to—
So to be singled out, built in and sung to.
—[Miscellaneous]

COL. FRED AND THE THIEF.

How Fred Grant finished the Pre-linger of an Old Lady's Pocket-Book.
—[Hulton in New York Times]

In an up-town restaurant, a few nights ago, a company of gentlemen sat dining over their cigars as they listened to the music. Of course the name of Gen. Grant was mentioned, and more than one good story was told to the old commander's credit. One of the party who had been listening without saying much finally broke in: "I don't know much about the general," he said, "but I know that he's got a son who is true blue; I mean Fred Grant. No, I never saw him in my life, but all the same I know what I am talking about when I say that he is just one of the manliest fellows that ever breathed. He was on a Washington express train coming over to New York one day a half a dozen years or so ago."

"The cars were crowded and he shared his seat with an old woman who got on the train at Baltimore. At Wilmington he left her to go into the smoker, and the train was drawing into the old West Philadelphia station when he returned to his seat away in the rear of the coach. The old lady whom he had left he discovered in the aisle clutching as best she could at the flying coat-tails of a burly man who, making a bolt for the car door, was dragging her after. Fred Grant was at her side in a trice. 'He has my money,' exclaimed the excited woman; 'he has my money; he's a thief!'

"Fred made a grab at the coat tail, but just in advance of his grip the coat tail went flying out of the door, young Grant close after. Into the station went both men. Once Fred Grant's hand was full upon the highest, but the Grant blood was up at the fellow's pitch and instead of laying hold of the runaway Fred suddenly planted himself firmly on the old plank walk and then with a dash that was simply chain lightning out went his boot, once, twice, thrice, right under that flying coat tail with thunder that fairly echoed to the roof. It was just as if a pile driver had struck that flying gentleman, and he spun through the air like a demoralized football on the Polo grounds. Yes, he escaped, gentlemen, he deserved every cent that he got. A dozen times the sun couldn't have settled for necessary repairs."

"The old lady—her tears were dried. That young man Grant took care of her right through to New York, and when he put her in a cab to send her to her destination here a roll of bills went into her hands too. And when she begged him to tell her his name so that she could make good her loan, this is what he said: 'On one condition—that you will never talk to anybody about what I've had the chance to do for you to-day.' And, gentlemen, she never did talk about it, though the card he gave her kept as one of her choicest treasures. She is dead now, and I guess there is no harm in breaking her pledge. That woman was my mother. That is how I know and what I know about Fred Grant."

Filibustering in the Senate.

[Edmund Atton in St. Nicholas.]
We had some memorable filibustering in my day. I remember one night when a great contest in the senate over a certain bill culminated in twenty hours of work! The majority had determined that they would "sit the bill" out that night. So they assembled in force, ready to pass it whenever they might see their chance. The minority were also on hand. Both sides were nearly exhausted. At the hands of the clock approached the hour of midnight, there was scarcely a senator in the room. I remember that Senator Merriam and the minority, Senator Logan "watched" the majority.

Senator Merriam had the floor, with the unlimited privilege of continuous debate permitted by the rules, and he seemed prepared to talk forever. But occasionally he paused to allow another member of the minority to make a motion to adjourn, upon which the "yess and nays" would be ordered. "And the clerk will call the roll!" Those words were the signal for action. "Call up the senators!" cried Senator Logan. "Call up the senators!" came from Senator Merriam. "Call up the senators!" echoed Capt. Bassett. This is how we passed the time. Each of us would rush round through the various rooms and give one of those sleeping senators a little pat, shouting, "Yess and nays, and dart away to find another. Sometimes a dozen pages would waken the same senator. In fact, we usually ran in a line all together.

Soon the sleepy legislators could be seen creeping into the chamber from all directions, half awake, with disheveled hair and preventing a way-begone appearance generally. They would mechanically cast their votes, the motion to adjourn would be lost, Senator Merriam would resume his speech and the other senators, except the "watchers," would again vanish as mysteriously and as noiselessly as the soldiers of Roderick Dhu. When he had given them time to fall asleep, he would again yield the floor to a motion to adjourn, and the performance would be repeated.

A Doctor's Queer Experience.

[Harper's Bazar.]
"We have many queer experiences in the practice of my profession," said the doctor, as he deftly dusted the powder on the little papers spread before him. "Only the other day I drove over to Ossian, seven miles away, to visit a patient, an old gentleman suffering from an incurable disease that I had been treating for some months. Tying my horse I walked to the house and entered the sitting-room without knocking. Judge of my surprise to see lying on a stretcher the dead body of my patient dead for burial, and his coffin upon the bed awaiting its occupant."

"I had just time to note these things when the wife came in, and simply saying 'Good morning,' she slipped to a cupboard, and taking out an envelope containing money emptied it into the coffin-lid, and counting out my fee handed it to me, replaced the envelope in the cupboard, and left the room without saying a word. I had often been paid in the presence of my recovered patients, but never before with the stiff, stark evidence of the ineffectiveness of my favorite 'pat' staring me in the face. I fled."

Heads an Electric Pen.

[Bob Burdette.]
"How can I become a ready writer?" asks a young man with literary aspirations. Use carbine ink, young man, as carbine ink. Then your thoughts will flow so freely it will make your back ache."
